Papal Encyclical.

Pope Francis recently issued his 1st Papal Encyclical, entitled: 'Laudato si' or 'Praise to you' which is the work of many different authors on the subject of the environment. It is an immense subject on how we treat God's creation, from natural resources to wild animals, from crop production to intense animal rearing, from rain-forests, to buildings and so on. How do we, mankind, agree on development and share the world's resources, need as opposed to greed. Are there areas we prefer not to question? We may agree that travel is beneficial, easy and assists people to visit relatives, business associates and tourist places. But does anyone dare to ask, let alone measure the enormous pollution of our skies around about 32,000 feet where thousands of planes travel every day. Can we know if this affects in any way the extremes of weather, droughts, and floods in parts of the world that have experienced these as never before?
